

FIG. 1

The cellular module responds to a cellular communication signal by providing a trigger pulse derived from the data component of the cellular communication signal. The trigger pulse is applied to a special hardware path leading from the cellular module to the GPS module. The special hardware path conducts the trigger pulse to the GPS module in such a way that the trigger pulse is provided to the user module substantially free of any significant random delays.

FIG. 2